

READ JONAH 3: 10-4, 11

The main focus of the Bible as far as our obedience is concerned is watchfulness of our thoughts, words and actions.

The fact that Jonah obeyed God's command to preach repentance to Nineveh is proof of some inward change.

Then we discover that he becomes angry at the idea that God would want to save such ungodly people.

4:4. The question is put to Jonah by God. “Do you do well to be angry” (Is it right for you to be angry about this? NLT)

Jonah appears to avoid the question and instead retreats to the edge of the city to see if God is really going to spare it.

He made a shelter to protect himself from the sun and God provided greater shade by the leaves of a rapidly growing plant.

Jonah's mood changed for the better until a worm and a scorching east wind destroyed the plant by God's design.

I often wonder how it is that my mood can be so changeable (like the Irish weather), sometimes caused by inconvenience and sometimes by irrational feelings. (Psa.42:11)

4:9. God asks the same question to Jonah. “Is it right for you to be angry?”

If Jonah can feel sorry that a plant died why shouldn't God feel sorry for a city in danger of being destroyed?

As I meditated on this passage there are some things that I have come to see to be of great importance.

Firstly, God is concerned about the destructive power of unwarranted anger in our hearts.

Secondly, God wants us to share in His compassion for the lost.

Thirdly, we have to learn to prioritize. What is more important mercy or misery?
